What is GDPR?

Essentially, GDPR is a new set of rules which give more control and increased privacy rights to individuals whose personal data is being collected by organisations.

Who does GDPR apply to?

GDPR applies to any organisation, including clubs operating within the EU.

What is personal data under the GDPR?

Personal data is any data which could be processed to uniquely identify an individual. Obvious examples include name, address, date of birth etc., though GDPR extends the definition of personal data to include less obvious examples such as photographs and IP addresses.

The Data Protection Principles

The GDPR includes several data protection principles that clubs need to be aware of whenever they are using personal data. In order to comply with these principles, clubs need to:

Identify a lawful basis to process the personal data (from the list set out in the GDPR), and provide a privacy notice to members, informing them how the club uses their personal data.

Only collect, use and keep personal data for specific purposes – i.e. only use a member's personal data for membership purposes; The GDPR does not allow data to be collected for one purpose and used for another.

Only collect, use and keep personal data that clubs actually need; We can only hold sufficient information on an individual to do the job. We cannot hold more information than is necessary.

Keep personal data up-to-date where possible; We must take reasonable steps to ensure the information we hold is accurate and up to date for the purposes for which they are processed; and that inaccurate data are erased or rectified without delay

Only keep personal data for as long as the club needs it – i.e. when a member leaves a club, clubs should review all the member's personal data held to see whether they still need it after a specific period of time (for example, three years); and

Protect personal data and keep it secure.

Process personal data in accordance with the rights of the individual – see "Your Rights" below
